A progressive Burbank is a successful Burbank.

This has been true since its founding in 1887. By all metrics, our beautiful city flourishes: business thrives, population booms, and our schools rival the best in the country.

For Burbank's future, here's what I believe:

A progressive Burbank is an affordable Burbank.

Good jobs bring workers, so we must meet our population density with innovative housing policies. Having managed many properties, I know we can stabilize soaring rental prices by supporting owner-operated properties and implementing rent control solutions that minimize abuse and empower residents.

A progressive Burbank is a compassionate Burbank.

While a majority of our paychecks have increased in recent years, some of our fellow neighbors still haven't recovered from the devastating recession that led to Burbank's rising homeless population. Simple steps can encourage the success of those in need and ensure we all have a place to call home at night.

A progressive Burbank is a united Burbank.

Burbank has the finest police officers in Southern California, yet their numbers are dwindling. We must aggressively pursue new incentives for local citizens to join the ranks of community-focused law enforcement.

I believe that a progressive Burbank is a successful Burbank.
